

WHAT WOULD WOODY DO

Where songwriting meets social conscience

Woody Guthrie wrote many social conscience and activist songs, and if he were alive today, he would certainly have plenty of material. Woody would stand up with the workers. Woody would work for peace and justice. Woody would fight against the Corporatists. Woody would want us all to do what's right.

What Would Woody Do? (WWWD) is a way for local songwriters to have their activist songs heard, and for local activists to hear new songs of social conscience, like Woody would write if he were still alive today.

WWWD has been approved by the
Woody Guthrie Foundation

WWWD events usually occur on the last Saturday of each month. You can always find out about the next WWWD event by visiting the web sites at the bottom of this flier. There are email lists on each of these sites to which you can subscribe to get notifications of upcoming WWWD events.

The WWWD Players

are a group of local songwriters who write songs with a social conscience. They'll make you laugh, cry, tap your feet, clap your hands, sing along, and if they do their job right, they will inspire you to go out and make the world a better place.

Woody would be proud of these singer songwriters. Please get out to see these players whenever and wherever they play.

Find out more about the WWWD Players at <http://whatwouldwoodydo.org>

WWWD is Sponsored by Democracy For the Heart of America at <http://dfha.org> and Cross Currents Council Songwriters Circle at <http://songwriterscircle.org>